

Director of Programming and Exhibitions

National Maritime Museum

Director of Programming and Exhibitions

£60,000 - £75,000 plus performance pay and benefits (total package £72,000 - £90,000 plus benefits)

Come to Greenwich, World Heritage Site and home of the Prime Meridian, at the most exciting time of our lives.

The National Maritime Museum opened the £35 million Sammy Ofer Wing, Archive and Special Exhibitions Gallery in July 2011. Together with the 17th-century Inigo Jones' Queen's House and Wren's Royal Observatory, to mark Greenwich becoming the first Royal London Borough in over 100 years and the reopening of the Cutty Sark, the Museum complex will become collectively Royal Museums Greenwich. We are also a venue for the London 2012 Olympic and Paralympic Games.

To reflect this significantly enhanced scope of activity we are seeking someone to lead the Museum in the important areas of content programming and exhibitions. The role is responsible for conceiving, programming and implementing world-class major temporary exhibitions and pursuing a significant programme of permanent exhibitions, replacement and renewal as well as driving our digital media strategy and learning activity. You will be a world-class leader in your field: innovative, inspirational and with all the right ideas and flair to deliver the best possible exhibitions, public programmes, digital and learning experiences.

While a high level of creativity is clearly called for, you will balance that with a wholly practical and down-to-earth approach. The proven ability to lead and motivate teams is essential, along with a strong track record of delivering complex programmes in a museum, gallery or similar environment.
