

Head of the National Media Museum

National Media Museum

Award winning, visionary and unique the Media Museum houses world class collections in photography, film, broadcast and new media.

As Head of the National Media Museum you will have the drive and imagination to commission creative content and embrace new thinking, technologies and approaches for our collections, exhibitions and programmes.

The Museum is based in the heart of Bradford. It is one of a group of four museums including the Science Museum, the National Railway Museum and the Museum of Science and Industry Manchester. Together we reach over 5 million visitors.

The role includes:

- developing a vibrant programme of innovative exhibitions and programmes for local and national audiences
- leading the external promotion of the museum and its collections to a wide array of stakeholders
- building cultural partnerships across a local and national landscape
- developing and coaching an effective leadership team to ensure they reach their full potential
- working with the science museum to develop and deliver Media Space – a new exhibition and programme venue for the National Media Museum in London.
