British Museum

The British Museum
Department of Prehistory and Europe
Keeper
M4
Permanent
Full Time

The British Museum is seeking a specialist of academic distinction to provide leadership to and to manage the department of Prehistory and Europe, overseeing the curation of the department's extensive collections, covering artefacts from the earliest human activity to materials from the present day.

The role will involve directing and overseeing the department's curatorial and academic work, including research and overseas fieldwork and excavations, ensuring the maintenance of a high level of service to the public. The post holder will be responsible for the management and motivation of the department's staff and play a leading role in maintaining and developing links with appropriate institutions nationally and internationally.

A recognised authority in a relevant field, the ideal candidate will have experience at a senior level in a museum, university or similar organisation and be familiar with the material culture in an area relevant to the department's collections. You will also have the ability to; manage and inspire the department, to participate widely in the Museum's affairs and to undertake a representational role both in the UK and abroad.
